[SECTION-A]

[Reading Comprehension]

Note: Read the passage given below and answer the questions that follow:-

The role, friends play in our life has become significantly greater than at any other time in our history. Today many of us live and work at great distance from where we were born or grew up and are separated from our original families. The pain we feel when we are away from our families can be significant.

The happiness of individuals relies on friendships which form a necessary human connection. It is perfectly normal to need and want friends and depression is more prevalent among those who lack friends. They lack the intimacy and richness, friends reflect similar values to us. Yet these values are often different from the ones we grew up with; they are the values we created for ourselves in our adult lives.

Communication skills are fundamental in all friendships. The more friends and acquaintances one has, the greater are one's communication skills. Some call these people's skill.

Like watering a plant, we grow our friendship (and all our relationships) by nurturing them. Friendships need the same attention as other relationships if they are to continue . These relationships can be delightfully non-judgemental, supportive, understanding and fun.

Sometimes a friendship can bring out the positive side that you never show in any other relationship. This may be because the pressure of playing a 'role' (daughter, partner or a child) is removed. With a friend you are to be yourself and free to change. Of course you are free to do this in all other relationships as well but in friendships you get to have lots of rehearsals and discussions about changes as you experience them. It is an unconditional experience where you receive as much as you give. You can explain yourself to a friend openly without the fear of hurting a family member. How do friendships grow? The answer is simple. By revealing yourself; being attentive; remembering what is most important to your friend and asking them about it; putting yourself in their position; showing empathy; seeing the world through the eyes of your friend, you will understand the value of friendship. All these mean learning to accept a person from a completely different family to your own or perhaps, someone from a completely different cultural background. This is the way we learn tolerance. In turn we gain tolerance and acceptance for own differences.

Friendships are made by being considerate, which means all the communication skills come into play; active listening skill, question skill, negotiation skill, reflecting content skill, reflecting emotion skill and editing yourself.

Friendships offer a great opportunity to learn about yourself because a friend can reflect back to you 'how you come across in the world'. They also allow you to practice skills in dealing with 'personal boundaries' by looking after yourself as well as your friend. They help you develop resilience in relation to the wider social world beyond your family.

Read the following passage.

The oldest things on the planet are rocks. They cover the whole earth and are found in cities, the country, in the oceans and lakes, and under the soil.

Most of the earth's crust, which is the surface of the earth, is composed of igneous rock, Igneous rock is made from melted rock called magma which is found inside the earth. When magma pushes through cracks in the crust it is referred to as lava. This lava cools and hardens and becomes igneous rock. Examples of igneous rocks are granite and obsidian.

Another type of rock is called sedimentary. Sedimentary rock is composed of layers of sand, mud, and pebbles. These layers of sediment evolved over many years at bottoms of lakes and seas, then pressed together. Over time, the layers hardened and became stone. Examples of sedimentary rock are limestone, made of shells, sandstone, where small grains of sand are visible.

A third type of rock is metamorphic rock. Metamorphic rocks began their lives as other rocks. Then, over years and years, being buried deep in the ground, time, heat and pressure changed them into metamorphic rocks. Examples of metamorphic rock are marble and quartzite.

Rocks live forever. They are the oldest objects on the planet, and forever change to become new rocks over time.

(SECTION- A)

READING COMPREHENSION

Read the passage carefully and answer the following questions given below it:

1. Computers are capable of doing extremely complicated work in all branches of learning. They can solve the most complex mathematical problems or put a thousand unrelated data in order. These machines can be put to varied uses. For instance, they can provide information on the best way to prevent traffic accidents. They work accurately and at high speed. They save research workers' years of hard work. This whole process, by which machines can be used to work for us, has been called 'automation'. Automation may enable human beings to enjoy more leisure than they do today. The coming of automation is bound to have important social -consequences.
2. There is no possibility that human beings will be controlled by machines. Though computers are capable of learning from their mistakes and improving on their performances, they need detailed instructions from human beings to be able to operate. They can never lead independent lives or 'rule the world' by taking decisions of their own
3. Ordinary people would then be able to use them to obtain valuable information. Computers could be plugged into a wireless network and could be used like radios. For instance, people going on a holiday could be informed about weather conditions. Car drivers can be given an alternative route when there 's a traffic jam. This will enable people who do not share a common language to talk to each other without difficulty or to read foreign publications.

Choose the appropriate options:

Read the following passage.

If one fine morning you happen to find a butterfly inside a room near a window, what do you do? You probably think, “what a lovely thing” and open the window, to let it fly away. Well , that is quite a virtuous action to take for a pest which will lay a lot of eggs, which will in turn change to caterpillars, which will then start to eat your cabbages, other vegetables and flowers.

Now suppose that, instead of a butterfly, it is a spider that you see. What do you do now? You may cry out, “Oh, look at the horrible spider.” You may even run for a broom or a chappal and kill it. If you do, you will have killed one of your best friends.

Why are spiders among our best friends? Simply because they destroy many harmful insects, including some of our worst enemies. These are the insect that devour our crops, cause diseases both to us and to farm animals, and torment our skins, Spiders do not have specific insects which they do not usually prey on the large ones.

There are two main groups of spiders: the weaving spiders and the hunting spiders. These two groups differ in various ways. The weavers have bigger spinnerets (those parts of the body from which the silk comes out) and their legs are generally much longer, with special claws at the end. The hunting spiders (which do not spin webs) have smaller spinnerets and strong thicker legs. They have better eyesight than the weavers.
